GINGER STOPS CANCER FROM SPREADING

Kencur (Kaempferia galanga L), a tropical plant in the ginger family, suppresses cancer cell growth, say scientists from Osaka Metropolitan University.

Its active component, EMC (ethyl p-methoxycinnamate), has a 'significant' impact on the disease, and blocks mitochondrial transcription factor A (TFAM), a biological process that enables cancer to spread.

It is the first time that scientists have directly witnessed the impact of EMC on TFAM processes. "It's highly expected that TFAM will become a new marker for anti-cancer effects in the future as research advances in related fields," said Akiko Kojima, one of the researchers.

Kencur is traditionally used in cooking and as a remedy for upset stomachs, but now it can also be harnessed as a cancer fighter.

CONSIDER VITAMIN B12 SUPPLEMENTATION FOR PATIENTS ON METFORMIN

Metformin is a first-line type 2 diabetes treatment for lowering blood glucose. However, a common side effect of the drug is that it lowers vitamin B12 levels. This report recommends considering vitamin B12 supplementation in patients receiving metformin, particularly for older patients and other patients at risk for reduced dietary vitamin B12 absorption, and for patients who have received metformin for several years.

Adenosylcobalamin is an activated form of B12, making it immediately available for use by the body (as is methylcobalamin). While methylcobalamin is found in the cytosol of cells and predominates in blood and other fluids, adenosylcobalamin is the major form of vitamin B₁₂ stored in the mitochondria of cellular tissues.

Adenosylcobalamin is the co-enzyme for the conversion of methylmalonyl-CoA to succinyl-CoA. This is a key reaction in one of the pathways of the citric acid cycle. It is therefore crucial to the normal process of gluconeogenesis.

Vitamin B12 contributes to normal energy-yielding metabolism, to normal functioning of the nervous system and to normal homocysteine metabolism.

Vitamin B12 also contributes to the reduction of tiredness and fatigue. It is essential for normal immune function and psychological function, and is essential in the production of red blood cells.

As you are aware, Pure Bio strives to always give you the very best value for money without compromising on quality. We do not believe in over-inflating our prices in order to then be able to offer a discount - a common selling tool in the nutrition industry. We like to keep things simple. To this end, we continually endeavour to keep our prices to the minimum wherever possible and have not increased our prices across our product ranges for 3 years.

However, due to increased raw material costs and supply chain transport costs, particularly in the present inflationary times, we can no longer absorb 100% of these price increases. In order to minimise the impact on you and your patients, we intend to absorb the majority of these increases but we are forced to increase our prices marginally from 1st March 2024 on the majority of our products.

We hope that this advance notice gives you plenty of time to stock up on your regular products before the price rises on 1st March.

Thank you for your continued support of Pure Bio – we greatly value your business.
